ABSTRACT

This third volume of the Image of the World of Work program presents guidelines for the development of lesson plans by participating teachers and representative lesson plans which were developed. Lessons were planned within the existing content of seventh grade language arts and social studies--35 lesson plans for language arts, 20 for social studies, and 4 miscellaneous. The components of these lessons were to include cognitive objectives, occupational information, attitudinal objectives, student tasks, and evaluation of lesson effectiveness. Volumes I and II are available as VT 009 939 and VT 009 986 respectively. "The World of Work and Learning," a position paper which provides an overview of all three phases of the project, is available as VT 009 940. (CH)

VOLUME III

INTRODUCTION

The Image of the World of Work report appears in three Volumes. The first describes the background of the RMEL Occupational Education program and the intervention process designed to meet the program objectives. Volume II reports the development of instruments, evaluation design, data analysis and generalizes the outcomes of the intervention activities.

As a part of the RMEL strategy, participating teachers were asked to plan lessons within the existing content of seventh grade language arts and social studies. The major components of these lessons were to include:

- 1. Cognitive objectives
- 2. Occupational information
- 3. Attitudinal objectives
- 4. Student tasks
- 5. Evaluation of lesson effectiveness

A report of teacher attempts to sponsor the RMEL program in their classrooms constitutes Volume III.

The classroom teacher is the designer and producer of many of the materials and procedures with which he does his work. The creation of lesson plans, curriculum materials, teaching procedures and tests to measure student progress and the adaptation of these materials to the individual student's needs and/or to the specific classroom situation, traditionally are the responsibility of the teacher. (See Figure 1) Thus, much of the educational material and the procedures that are in current use has been "developed" locally by teachers. The RMEL strategy was to build upon the strengths of participating teachers.

The exhibits (Appendix A, B, and C) represent the overt attempts of teachers to provide occupational information and to foster the work relevant attitudes characteristic of satisfying employment. Individually the lesson plans cover a time span ranging from a single period to several weeks.

Among the problems confronting the RMEL staff was the diverse preparation which teachers had received from colleges and universities. In attempting to reach a common understanding, work sessions were conducted to review the objectives inherent in the local social studies and language arts curriculum. That is, an attempt was made to have teachers assess what their content objectives were and to have them list the materials, activities and experiences utilized locally. At no time did RMEL staff evaluate or offer criticisms of local practice. The staff concentrated on tutoring the participants by utilizing small group techniques, special consultants and hand-out materials.

Turning from the statements of local cognitive objectives, attention was focused upon the affective behavior of pupils. Value positions and attitudinal manifestations constituted the major thrust of the intervention process. The illusive nature of evaluation of the affective domain was considered to be an element requiring urgent attention. Teachers were introduced to many different organizational patterns through which the attitudes of pupils at work could be observed. Participants were stimulated by looking at pupils as individuals and quickly began devising experiences which increased the pupils' opportunity to commit himself.

Social studies and language arts are judged to be an account of man's work and his contribution to society. In an occupational sense this content can be thought of as a record of man's work. Thus, the experimental teachers sought to call attention to the occupations, working conditions, and worker traits of the people, data and things identified in locally adopted curriculum materials.

Classroom activities became more diversified as indicated by teacher reports of the use of tape recorders, role playing, socio-drama, films, still pictures, student-prepared video vignettes, general assemblies, visits by resource persons to the classrooms, personal inquiry into occupations and coordination of pupil experiences among teachers within a school.

The background of the classroom teacher is typically devoid of any experiment regarding ways of looking at jobs or preparation for one's life work. To bridge this preparation gap, a series of six essays were prepared, distributed and discussed among the experimental teachers. Content of the essays is based upon a modern view of occupations and appeared to provide sufficient information for structuring pupil experiences along occupational lines.

The stages of development leading to the guidelines for designing an Image of the World of Work lesson plan were as follows:

1. a review of local content objectives
2. a search for information within the subject matter dealing with people, data, and things, i.e., occupational information
3. a review of value positions and attitudinal manifestations, i.e., the affective domain
4. an exchange of information descriptive of teaching styles
5. establishment of an information base regarding worker traits and the dignity of work
6. assessment of pupil achievement, sponsorship of attitudes and overall impact of the lesson.

The plans presented (Appendix A, Social Studies; Appendix B, Language Arts; and Appendix C, Other Areas of the Curriculum) are examples of overt attempts on the part of classroom teachers to implement the objectives of the RMEL program. It is anticipated that other teachers with their personal teaching styles may sponsor an extra opportunity for their pupils by engaging in a similar planning process. The guidelines for the planning process appear below.

GUIDELINES FOR THE DEVELOPMENT OF
IMAGE OF THE WORLD OF WORK
LESSON PLANS

UNIT:	A particular block of content containing several lessons. Example - Greek mythology.
LESSON TITLE:	Special lesson within any given unit. Example - The importance of the gods in the lives of Greeks.
DURATION:	Amount of time to be devoted to this lesson, specify approximate number of class hours. Example - 7 class hours.
PROGRAM OBJECTIVES:
Content:	This includes the subject matter objectives specified for this lesson including all cognitive objectives and attitudinal objectives not specified in the RMEL program.
Attitudinal:	Check attitudes which appear to be inherent in the unit or lesson as taken from the RMEL attitude list on the back of the program plan. This includes all Image of the World of Work attitudes focused upon in this lesson.
LESSON FEATURES:
	A short narrative or outline description of the key elements through which the teacher will attempt to provide experiences related to the world of work.
TEACHER ACTIVITIES:
	Methods - Techniques - Procedures through which teachers will attempt to reach attitudinal objectives by means of their existing curriculum.
STUDENT TASKS:	Check the tasks used in the conduct of this lesson. The list shown on the program plan is only a sample of possible tasks. Space is provided for teachers to add other tasks. A section is also allotted for teachers to clarify or elaborate on those tasks specified. This may include any unique features, methods, or techniques by which these student tasks will be used to attain the attitudinal objectives specified.

TEACHING RESOURCES: There sources to be employed in reaching program objectives. Example - Films, community resource persons, film strips, tapes, Socio-Guidance series, records, slides, supplementary etc.

EVALUATION OF STUDENTS:

Methods of the measurement to be used to determine if lesson objectives were met. Additional space is provided for the listing of evaluation techniques not specified on the program plan.

TEACHER'S EVALUATION OF THE ATTITUDINAL ELEMENTS OF THIS LESSON:

Circle the number which best describes the way you feel about this lesson based on the effective-ineffective continuum shown on the program plan. This section should be completed after the lesson has been presented.

Why:

Explain your reasons for making the above rating. Please include any intuitions, student expressions, or behavioral clues that led you to make this choice.

I FEEL THAT THIS LESSON INFLUENCED THE FOLLOWING ATTITUDES: (A-J)

Check those attitudes which you feel the lesson actually had an impact on. These do not have to coincide with the attitudes specified under the program objectives section. It is quite natural that there will be some differences between the projected objectives and those actually attained.

APPENDIX A

SOCIAL STUDIES LESSON PLANS

The exhibits in Appendix A are representative of the lesson planning form and the experiences provided for pupils by teachers in the experimental project.

The reader should feel free to integrate local content, occupational information and affective domain experiences in keeping with his teaching style. These exhibits are records of overt attempts to sponsor the RMEL Image of the World of Work objectives.

POST LESSON EVALUATION:

classes and there are from 7 to 9 groups in each class. I'm kept busy allotting time (making lesson-plan changes), keeping a record of oral work done, field trip days, resource people due, etc. Secretaries record all readings, drawings, written work, etc. The majority seems this interested and enthusiastic. Of course, there are always some who never seem to have a desire to work, never seem to appreciate quality, or take pride in accomplishment. However, I've tried to work these people into groups that contain at least two strong members. They seem to be able to influence these lazy ones more than a teacher can.

This lesson attempts to emphasize the responsibility of the employer in hiring an employee, and the desirable qualities common to all job applicants. It is directed toward the students' own discovery of what attitudes are desirable.	A. X B. X C. X D. X E. X F. X G. X H. X I. X J. (See List on reverse side)	The lesson features an imaginary situation in which each child, due to an emergency absence of his parents, is called housekeeper, secretary upon to take full responsibility in the hiring of a person. Appointments for interviews have been set up and parents have left child with some instructions as to the kind of qualities desired in the employee.	The class counts off by 4's, one number being the interviewer, others interviewed. The job may be for a yard man, or someone from his own knowledge of his father's true business or profession. Volunteer applicants are chosen by the interviewer, 3 for each job, but pupils can only be interviewed once. ## Money (points) you can earn.

Language Mechanics

Exercises worked and corrected in class-----$2 a piece
Review exercises-----$? according to points
Write up a test or exercise for class use of 10 questions--$10 a piece (minus $1 for each unusable sentence)

Green Grammar

Each chapter-----$50
Suggested projects for carrying out learning in chapter
(alone or in groups)-----$5 per suggestion
Working problems-----$10 per allowable problem successfully worked.

Composition

Ideas for compositions in conjunction with green grammar and literature-----$5-10 per workable idea accepted by employer
Compositions-----up to----$25 per composition
Money deducted for mistakes. Papers to be corrected according to plan already given.
Correcting classmates compositions-----$2 a paper

Literature

Reading assigned stories and showing by short composition or test that you understood it-----$10
Directing a class discussion successfully (determined by employer) through use of questions or other methods up to-----$25
Reports pertaining to the literature (prearranged with employer)-----up to----$25

WHY? The students were very interested in what these men had to say, what they looked for in hiring, and even surprised I think to see how important these men felt that attitudes were. Before we had the panel many students seemed to have the opinion that a person's GPA or other tangible qualifications were much more important than what their attitudes were. (see following attitudes:*		INEFFECTIVE
